

High-density integrated container rack explosion-proof type in stock

AI Overview

Explosion-proof, high-density container racks are available from multiple suppliers, including Kozzi Space, Rittal, DENIOS, and R. STAHL, offering modular, compliant, and high-capacity storage solutions.

Blast-Resistant Modular Containers Kozzi Space offers the Sentinel Series, designed for extreme environments with reinforced steel frames capable of withstanding explosive shockwaves and debris. These containers are available in 20-foot and 40-foot modules, fully integrated with explosion-proof electrical systems, thermal insulation, and mission-critical communications wiring. They are suitable for storing sensitive chemicals, high-value equipment, or hazardous materials in high-risk industrial sites, and can be stacked or deployed rapidly on-site.

Energy Storage and Modular Racks Rittal provides energy storage containers with flexible modular racks that can accommodate various battery types. These containers feature high-efficiency Blue e+ cooling technology and customizable rails and component shelves. Available in multiple sizes, including 20 ft and 40 ft ISO containers, they are designed for high-density storage while maintaining safety and energy efficiency. The modular design allows adaptation to specific requirements, making them suitable for industrial or hazardous environments.

IBC Tote Racks for Hazardous Chemicals DENIOS offers IBC tote racks for 275-, 330-, and 350-gallon containers, engineered for vertical, space-efficient storage with integrated spill containment sumps. These racks comply with SPCC, OSHA, and NFPA regulations, providing safe chemical storage without sacrificing floor space. Configurations include 2-, 4-, and 6-tote systems, supporting secure handling of hazardous liquids in industrial facilities.
