

Price of ribbon optical cable splicing clamps

AI Overview

Ribbon optical cable splicing clamps, such as the FasClamp system, typically range from $50 to $150 per unit depending on size and configuration. Overview Ribbon optical cable splicing clamps are essential tools for securing fiber optic cables during splicing, preventing movement, and ensuring precise alignment. The FasClamp and FasClampXL systems are widely used in the industry and can accommodate single flat drop cables, bundles, or ribbon cables. They feature a non-slip rubber gasket and adjustable hinge and machine nut sides to hold various cable diameters securely, making them suitable for indoor, vehicle, or trailer-mounted splicing setups. Pricing Factors Clamp Size and Model: Larger clamps or those designed for multiple cable bundles (FasClampXL) generally cost more than smaller, single-cable models. Material and Durability: High-quality clamps with reinforced plates and rubber gaskets are priced higher due to their reliability and longevity. Vendor and Purchase Volume: Buying from suppliers like GME Supply or in bulk can affect the unit price. Typical retail prices for professional-grade clamps range from $50 to $150 per clamp, though specialized or high-capacity models may exceed this range. Additional Considerations Compatibility: Ensure the clamp supports the fiber type and ribbon count you are working with. Reusability: Many clamps are reusable, which can reduce long-term costs for frequent splicing projects. Accessories: Some clamps are sold as part of a splicing kit, which may include fusion splicers, cleavers, and protective sleeves, affecting overall cost. For precise pricing, it is recommended to check suppliers like GME Supply, Amazon, or specialized fiber optic equipment distributors, as prices can vary based on model, shipping, and availability.
