

Which company manufactures Huawei's optical splitters

AI Overview

Shenzhen Uonel Technology Co., Ltd. manufactures Huawei's optical splitters. Huawei's optical splitters, including models like the SPL9102, SPL9103, SPL2803, SPL9101, SPL1101, SPL9201, SPL9202, and SPL1202, are produced by Shenzhen Uonel Technology Co., Ltd., a global provider of telecommunication equipment and services based in China. This company operates under strict quality control standards to ensure that Huawei Access Network products meet performance and reliability requirements. Types and Applications Huawei optical splitters are used in FTTx (Fiber to the x) and ODN (Optical Distribution Network) deployments. They come in various formats, including high-density cassette and box-type splitters with SC/APC ports, suitable for installation in ODF (Optical Distribution Frames) and FAT (Fiber Access Terminals). These splitters support multiple splitting ratios, typically ranging from N:2 to N:64, and are designed for indoor and outdoor network distribution. Additional Notes While Huawei designs and brands these splitters, the actual manufacturing is outsourced to specialized suppliers like Shenzhen Uonel Technology, which ensures compatibility with Huawei's GPON/EPON networks and maintains the high standards required for optical communication equipment. This approach allows Huawei to focus on network integration and system-level solutions while relying on trusted OEM partners for component production.
